BarCamp is an unconference, organized on the fly by attendees, for attendees. There is no registration fee, but you can't just attend a BarCamp—you have to participate by giving a presentation, a lightning talk, or joining into another cooperative event.

Topics may include, but are not limited to: Open source software, Web 2.0 (or bubble 2.0?), online communities, mobile computing, videoblogging, programming languages, GNU/Linux, and your favorite project. There will also be a software development contest and other fun activities day and night throughout the conference.
